

HASTEN BUSINESS TO GET AWAY ON JUNKET

HOUSE

Fourteenth Day

Three new bills were introduced, four passed on third reading, one of which now goes to the governor, and ten measures passed on second reading and were set for final reading tomorrow, in the house this morning. The chief executive's seventh message also was received and sent to the printing committee, two other communications noted and four resolutions were presented. Then the house adjourned, at 10:48 a. m., until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, the members embarking in autos and going out to the College of Hawaii for the usual visit of inspection, where they remained until a late hour this afternoon.

Two of the new bills introduced this morning were by Poepeo. His measures so far have met an untimely fate. As he arose to present his "brain children" this morning he commented aloud: "All ready for the slaughter." One, H. B. 138, would provide for the instruction of children in the public schools in the Hawaiian language; the other, H. B. 139, relates to procedure in divorce cases.

The third bill, by P. J. Goodness, proposes to amend the statute relating to providing roads for homesteaders.

Senator Baker's measure, S. B. 35, which would raise the age of consent one year for young people desiring to assume the marriage ties, was passed on third reading, with six dissenting votes, those opposing it being da Silva, Kawewehi, Makekai, Paie, Poepeo and Wilcox.

Three measures, S. B. 14, H. B. 4 and H. B. 52 were tabled on recommendation of the committees to which they had been referred. Rep. da Silva's house bill No. 83 did not suit the judiciary committee. On the committee's report it also was tabled and a substitute measure prepared by the committee was introduced and sent to the printer.

Word also was received from territorial Secretary Mott-Smith, advising the house that the governor has attached his signature to Senator Lauken's S. B. 7, now becoming Act 7 of the session laws of 1913, relating to the regulation of the public schools.

What Is the Moon Made Of?

by MARTHA B. EDGARTON

Miss Madeline Rogers, a very beautiful and attractive American girl, went to Paris with letters that gained her the entry to the American colony there.

There was something very original, something unique, about Miss Rogers that captivated the young French bloods, nearly all of whom straightway proceeded to fall in love with her. Whether it was this or because she was far more natural and unconventional than the women she associated with, certain it is that many of them hated her. That the men, on the contrary, both respected and loved her is evident from the fact that they all wished to marry her.

The young lady was a good deal of a flirt, but it is questionable if she realized in a young man's company she was giving him encouragement. The poet hath said, "Loving seemeth like breathing." In Miss Rogers' case flirting was quite as natural a process. She treated the young men with whom she was pleased in a way that made them think that a proposition would be immediately accepted. This she did unintentionally and unconsciously of the interpretation that might be put upon her acts. She was as heart free as a bird, and when the men responded to her soft looks and words she supposed they were treating her as they treated their other women friends. In other words, she did not suppose that what passed between them was serious.

One evening Miss Rogers awoke as from a series of pleasant dreams. A lady who thoroughly understood her and was consequently very fond of her took her aside and said to her:

"My child, do you know that when the sun rises tomorrow morning three of our prominent Parisian young men are going to fight for you on the Bois de Boulogne?"

"Fight for me?" exclaimed the astonished girl, turning pale.

"Yes. Each claims to be the point of becoming engaged to you and resents the other's attentions."

"For heaven's sake who are these men?"

"There is Edouard du Four."

"Well."

"The Count de Luny."

"He too?"

"Yes, and the third is Maitre Fallinsbee, the rising young jurist."

"But how can the three fight a duel? I thought duels were fought by two, one on each side."

"So they are. Du Four has challenged the other two. He first fights with De Luny, and if he kills the count he then fights with Fallinsbee."

"Oh, my goodness gracious! How do you know this?"

"My husband learned of it and told me as a secret, especially enjoining me to tell no one. I have come to you with it because I consider it best for you to take measures to stop it."

"How can I do that?"

"I fear it is too late to do anything tonight, but you might be on the ground in time to choose between them."

"I'll be there in time to choose none of them. Will you chaperon me?"

"If you wish it."

"I must assuredly do."

"You must be ready to start early."

"How early?"

"Three o'clock."

The next morning long before the people of Paris were stirring, especially in the Bois de Boulogne, the two ladies drove up to the dueling ground, where they saw the three lovers, accompanied by three seconds and three surgeons, preparing to prick one another with long thin swords.

"Will you kindly tell me," said Miss Rogers, "what you gentlemen are here for?"

Jules Cartier, Du Four's second, acted as spokesman for the men. Of course it would not do for him to admit that they were going to fight about her, so he said:

"M. du Four remarked last night at the Circle Francais that the moon was made of cheese. This the Count de Luny denied. He said it was made of pudding. The result between two gentlemen of honor is obvious."

"And what has M. Fallinsbee to do with the matter?"

"He claims that the moon is jelly."

"Indeed! And they propose to kill one another for so trifling a cause?"

There was an embarrassing silence, which was broken by the count saying:

"Perhaps mademoiselle will end the quarrels by deciding which of the three moonisms is right."

It was plain that the lady's decision was to be taken as a choice between her three suitors. She asked if they would abide by her decision, and they admitted that they would.

"Very well, gentlemen. What the moon is made of depends upon the perceptive faculties of the one who views it. The eye is simply the visual organ of the brain. Hence to M. du Four it is cheese, to the Count de Luny it is pudding, and to M. Fallinsbee it is jelly."

A burst of laughter broke from the seconds and the surgeons, while the principals stood stiff as ramrods, glaring at each other and the rest of the party.

"Gentlemen, good morning," said Miss Rogers, and, getting into her carriage with her friend, she was driven away.

The others soon followed without a fight.

"Yes, Crisco makes as fine a cake as the best butter and costs but half as much."

Any woman who uses Crisco for cake making will tell you so.

Why shouldn't it?

It is even richer than butter. Butter is almost one-fifth water. Crisco is 100 per cent. shortening.

It is shortening of the best grade. Strictly vegetable in origin and manufactured by a scientific process which produces a product of the highest quality and of absolute uniformity. It has only a mild, delicate, natural odor and flavor.

It is absolutely pure and clean—easy to digest, perfectly wholesome.

It is of just the right consistency—neither too hard nor too soft—to cream readily with other ingredients. In a word,

CRISCO

For Frying—For Shortening—For Cakemaking

embodies everything that, up to the present, has enabled butter alone to produce the most delicious cake.

In addition, it makes the cake keep fresh so much longer that women need bake but once a week to have fresh cake all the time.

Yet, with all these desirable qualities, Crisco is only half as much as butter. Women who are successful with their bakings ways have been careful to use the best butter. The promise of such perfect satisfaction and favorite cake recipe. Try it also in frying and for pastry, bread and biscuits. It gives such pleasing results in the most delicate cake that it must be greatly superior to ordinary fats for all other kinds of cooking.

Use a fifth less of Crisco than you would of butter or lard. When using it where you would butter, add salt in the proportion of a level teaspoonful to each cupful of Crisco.
